Synopsis

Girls Like That focuses on Scarlett, a teenage girl whose compromising photo goes viral online.

Instead of supporting her, Scarlett's lifelong group of female friends immediately turns on her. They distance themselves to protect their own reputations. They mock her through group chats and isolate her at school.

The play uses a fast-moving ensemble structure to show the herd mentality of teenagers. It contrasts the girls' current cruelty with their childhood memories of bonding and solidarity.

Flashbacks to women's rights movements throughout history show a troubling pattern. They reveal that women have fought for equality for generations, yet modern girls still use sexual double standards to police and shame each other.

As the digital harassment worsens, a second explicit image leaks. This time, the image belongs to a different girl in the group, completely shifting the power dynamics and forcing the characters to confront their own hypocrisy.
